

What is a blog?

A blog is a discussion and comments forum where individuals share their views, ideas, experiences, observations or hopes.

This blog deals with the subject of language, more specifically language rights. What do we mean by language rights? A language right is freedom to learn and speak ones language. We invite any young person to share their language stories.

For example, you might want to write about:

- What you like best about your language
- How important is it to know your language
- Challenges to learning your own language
- Growing up learning more than one language or many languages

The Blog is for:

Firstly, the blog is for any young person living in Nunavut. Secondly, any young person living around the world who wishes to reply or share their own stories, as long as it fits with the idea for this blog.